Abstract The authors examined the effects of a 12-week, 1000 kcal energy deficit diet on the body composition and metabolic profile of 10 obese women. The diet was composed of 25% protein, 40% carbohydrate, and 35% fat. The subjects lost an average of 10.5 kg (23.1%) of body weight and 10.5% of body fat. The diet was well tolerated, and the subjects maintained a high level of physical activity throughout the study. The authors conclude that a 1000 kcal energy deficit diet is an effective means of achieving weight loss in obese women.

Abstract and background: There are a number of reasons why the use of a single data source is not ideal for a study of this nature. The use of multiple data sources can provide a more comprehensive understanding of the phenomenon being studied. This study used a mixed methods approach, combining qualitative and quantitative data to explore the experiences of young people with mental health problems. The qualitative data was collected through focus group discussions and the quantitative data was collected through a survey. The results of the study suggest that young people with mental health problems experience a range of difficulties, including social isolation, stigma, and difficulties with employment. The study also found that young people with mental health problems are often not given the opportunity to express their views and opinions. The study has implications for the development of interventions and services for young people with mental health problems.
