

AP Government Chapter 16 Notes: Domestic and Economic Policy

Domestic Policy can be defined as all of the laws, government planning, and government actions that affect each individual's daily life in the United States → (ex) poverty, crime, and the environment.

- Many of our domestic policies are formulated and implemented by the federal government, but many others are the result of the combined efforts of federal, state, and local governments.

⇒ The Policy Making Process

○ Steps in the Policymaking Process

- Agenda Building – Congress must become aware that an issue requires congressional action. Agenda building may occur through:
 - A crisis
 - Technological change
 - Mass media campaigns
 - Efforts of strong political personalities
 - Effective lobbying groups
- Agenda Formulation – various policy proposals are discussed among government officials and the public.
 - Such discussions may take place in the printed media, on television, and in the halls of Congress.
 - Congress holds hearings, the president voices the administration's views, and the topic may even become a campaign issue.
- Agenda Adoption – choosing a specific strategy from among the proposals that have been discussed.
- Agenda Implementation – Government action must be implemented by bureaucrats, the courts, police, and individual citizens.
- Agenda Evaluation – after a policy has been implemented, increasingly groups are undertaking policy evaluation. Groups inside and outside government conduct studies to determine what actually happens after a policy has been implemented for a given period of time. Based on this “feedback” and the perceived success or failure of the policy, a new round of policy making initiatives will be undertaken to correct and hopefully improve on the effort.

○ Models of the Policymaking Process

- The Bureaucratic Politics Model – In the bureaucratic politics model, the relative power of the large bureaucracies in Washington determines which policy becomes part of the national agenda and which is implemented. This theory of American politics is based on the struggle among competing interests. (pluralist theory)
- The Power Elite, or Elitism, Model – powerful economic interests determine the outcome of policy struggles, according to the power elite, or elitism, model. The rich and those who know the rich determine what gets done. More important, the power elite decides when items do not get on the public agenda and which items get removed if they are already on it.
- The Marxist Model – closely aligned with the power elite model is the Marxist model of public policymaking, in which the ruling class institutes public policy, often at the expense of the working class. The Marxist solution is revolution and the seizure of government by the working class.
- The Incrementalist Model – Public policy evolves through small changes or adjustments, according to the incrementalist model. Consequently, policy makers examine only a few alternatives in trying to solve national problems. A good public-policy decision is made
