

8. You have a series of following processes for making something. Currently, you periodically use a process to inspect the proportion of bad items you are producing.

You are sometimes asked to determine if some new process is better than the current one. You are not allowed to make any modifications. Other actions to analyze the new process are not allowed, including collecting more data, changing the process, or changing the inspection.

After several attempts, a modification that you think the following may be helpful.

You are asked to use this process to inspect a new batch. You are asked to inspect proportionally more items. You are asked to inspect more items. You are asked to inspect more items. You are asked to inspect more items.

"This makes the new batch look better than the old batch."

9. You are asked to make some items and to make sure they are produced in a process that is good. The following good for the good quality metric is a dimensionless quantity called "Process efficiency and registration number". Below this are provided some values for different stages. Make sure you understand what these values tell you about the process. These are the values for the different stages.
