APA Documentation Style - 6th Edition

College students encounter various documentation styles. Always check with your professor for the preferred style for your class. One approach to using a documentation style is to follow style guides rather than trying to remember everything. Researchers in psychology and other social sciences often use rules from the American Psychological Association (APA). The following rules and examples are derived from the Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association, Sixth Edition: Guidelines for the reference list are presented, followed by rules for documenting sources within the body of the paper.

The purpose of documentation is three-fold: to give credit to one's sources, to establish the credibility of one's sources, and to provide a path to each individual source. In fact, the writer's job is to offer enough information on the references page to allow readers to locate the sources themselves. There are two basic elements of documentation: the references page and the in-text citations.

References Page – General Format

- Double space everything on the page.
- Center the title References.
- Use hanging indent for the entries: The first line of each entry begins at the left margin, while all subsequent lines of each entry are indented 1/2 inch. Most computer programs can provide this formatting. (In Office 2007, choose Paragraph, then Special, then Hanging.)
- Arrange the entries in alphabetical order by the last name of the first author listed for each source. If no author is listed, alphabetize by the first important word of the title (ignoring the, an, or a).
- The references page should be a separate page, following the last page of the body of the document (but before any appendices or supplemental pages).
- Each entry usually contains several elements: author, title(s), and publication information.
