

United States Government

Structure of the Government

The United States is a federal republic. This means that the government is made up of many different parts, each with its own responsibilities. The three main branches of the government are the Executive, Legislative, and Judicial branches. Each branch has a specific role to play in running the country.

The Executive branch is headed by the President. The President is responsible for enforcing the laws and representing the country. The Legislative branch is made up of Congress, which is divided into the House of Representatives and the Senate. Congress is responsible for making laws. The Judicial branch is headed by the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court is responsible for interpreting the laws and ensuring they are fair.

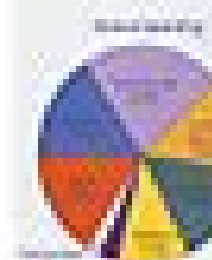

Each branch has its own powers and responsibilities. The Executive branch has the power to appoint and remove officials, and to veto laws. The Legislative branch has the power to pass laws and to confirm or reject appointments. The Judicial branch has the power to interpret the laws and to declare laws unconstitutional.

President and Vice President

Major Governmental Branches

The Executive branch is headed by the President. The President is responsible for enforcing the laws and representing the country. The President is elected by the people for a four-year term. The President can be re-elected for one more term. The President has the power to appoint and remove officials, and to veto laws.

The Legislative branch is made up of Congress, which is divided into the House of Representatives and the Senate. Congress is responsible for making laws. The House of Representatives is made up of 435 members, and the Senate is made up of 100 members. Each member represents a state or territory.
