History of the Government

For most of the country's history, the government has been run by a small group of people who were not elected. These people were called the "elite." They controlled the government and the economy. They were often from the same social class and had similar backgrounds. This system was called "oligarchy." In 1776, the American colonists decided to change this system. They wanted to create a government where everyone could have a say in how things were run. They wrote a document called the Declaration of Independence, which said that all people are created equal and have the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. This document became the foundation for the United States government.

George Washington and Thomas Jefferson

Government Structure

The government is divided into three branches: the executive, the legislative, and the judicial. The executive branch is responsible for carrying out laws. The legislative branch is responsible for making laws. The judicial branch is responsible for interpreting laws. The president is the head of the executive branch. Congress is the legislative branch. The Supreme Court is the highest court in the land and is part of the judicial branch.

Government Functions

The government has several important functions. One of the most important is to provide for the common defense. This means that the government is responsible for protecting the country from foreign attacks. Another important function is to regulate commerce. This means that the government is responsible for making sure that businesses are not unfair to consumers. The government also has a role in providing public services, such as education and healthcare.
