research Basic and applied research on deception and its detection Wolfgang Ambach, Matthias Gamer, 2014-08-07

Deception is a ubiquitous phenomenon in social interactions and has attracted a significant amount of research during the last decades. The majority of studies in this field focused on how deception modulates behavioral, autonomic and brain responses and whether these changes can be used to validly identify lies. Especially the latter question, which historically gave rise to the development of psychophysiological lie detection techniques, has been driving research on deception and its detection until today. The detection of deception and concealed information in forensic examinations currently constitutes one of the most frequent applications of psychophysiological methods in the field. With the increasing use of such methods, the techniques for detecting deception have been controversially discussed in the scientific community. It has been proposed to shift from the original idea of detecting deception per se to a more indirect approach that allows for determining whether a suspect has specific knowledge of crime-related details. This so-called Concealed Information Test is strongly linked to basic psychological concepts concerning memory, attention, orienting and response monitoring. Although research in this field has intensified with the advancement of neuroimaging techniques such as PET and fMRI in the last decade, basic questions on the psychological mechanisms underlying modulatory effects of deception and information concealment on behavioral, autonomic and brain responses are still poorly understood. This Research Topic brings together contributions from researchers in experimental psychology, psychophysiology and neuroscience focusing on the understanding of the broad concept of deception, including the detection of concealed information with respect to basic research questions as well as applied issues. This Research Topic is mainly composed of original research articles, but reviews and papers elaborating on novel methodological approaches have also been included. Experimental methods include, but are not limited to, behavioral, autonomic, electroencephalographic or brain imaging techniques that allow for revealing relevant facets of deception on a multimodal level. While this Research Topic primarily includes laboratory work, relevant issues for the field use of such methods are also discussed.

Psychology in Action Karen Huffman, Karen Dowdell, Catherine Ashley Sanderson, 2017

Revised edition of Psychology in action 2015 Interdisciplinary Handbook of Trauma and Culture Yochai Ataria, David Gurevitz, Haviva Pedaya, Yuval Neria, 2016-09-15

This lofty volume analyzes a circular cultural relationship not only how trauma is reflected in cultural processes and products but also how trauma itself acts as a critical shaper of literature, the visual and performing arts, architecture and religion and mythmaking. The political power of trauma is seen through US, Israeli and Japanese art forms as they reflect varied roles of perpetrator, victim and witness. Traumatic complexities are traced from spirituality to movement, philosophy to trauma theory. And essays on authors such as Kafka, Plath and Cormac McCarthy examine how narrative can blur the boundaries of personal and collective experience. Among the topics covered: Television, a traumatic culture, From Hiroshima to Fukushima, comics and animation as subversive agents of memory in Japan, The death of the witness in the era of testimony, Primo Levi and Georges Perec, Sigmund Freud's Moses and Monotheism and
