The GDP is a measure of the economic growth of a country (Pride, Hughes & Kapoor, 2010). It is applied as a quarterly indicator of all business activities as it measures the business cycle. Business cycle includes four phases where the economic growth can be classified as either growing or declining.

The four stages are the contraction, recession, expansion, and the peak (Pride, Hughes & Kapoor, 2010). The period in the slowdown of an economy is named the contraction; the recession is the period when the economy is at the bottom. In other words, it can be said to be the period between the expansion and contraction period.

Expansion is the time when the economy is growing while the peak is the climax of the economy. The Federal Reserve uses the GDP to determine when the change in the interest rates is required (Pride, Hughes & Kapoor, 2010).

For instance, when contraction starts the Federal Reserve lowers the interest rates to allow the expansion of the economy. When the expansion has gained momentum, the Federal Reserve increases the interest rate with the aimed of avoiding peak. If the peak is allowed the market is bound to receive shock and ultimately collapse.

The government is made up of several bodies that are used to determine the national policies with the aim of stabilizing the economy. For instance, the Department of Treasury is endowed with the mandate of constructing and implementation of the fiscal policies (Escobedo, 2009).

The Office of the President of the USA is entitled to make decisions that deal directly on the fiscal policies. The Office of the Management and Budgetary is concerned with the role of developing and analyzing the fiscal policies. The auditing of the fiscal policies is carried by the Government Accountability Office.

These bodies are concerned with interest rates, tax rates and government spending with the aim of controlling the performance of economy. The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) is entitled with the role of setting "sales taxes for goods and services taking place" (Escobedo, 2009). It is also involved in taxing the USA citizens.

Burkina Faso International Monetary Fund. African Dept., 2014-07-21 EXECUTIVE SUMMARY Growth remains robust despite slight downward revisions Growth estimates for 2013 and projections for 2014 were revised to 6.6 and 6.8 percent respectively reflecting weather and weaker terms of trade Inflation is around zero partly due to subsidized food prices The revised 2013 current account deficit rose to 7 percent of GDP with a drawdown of imputed reserves The 2013 fiscal deficit increased to 3.5 percent of GDP reflecting weaker revenues and spending for subsidies partly offset by higher grants In line with 2011 Article IV recommendations the authorities maintained a prudent fiscal stance despite numerous shocks and implemented structural reforms that have improved the resilience of agriculture especially cotton Social transfers have been bolstered to ensure the benefits of growth are better distributed An updated external stability analysis shows that the exchange rate is broadly in line with fundamentals and an updated joint debt sustainability analysis maintains a moderate risk of debt distress Program performance has been satisfactory The authorities are requesting a waiver for a non observance in the performance criterion for net domestic financing at end December 2013 with most other quantitative targets met and all structural benchmarks for end January and end March met Program targets differ mainly due to higher budget support projections The 3 percent fiscal deficit target for the medium term macroeconomic framework remains unchanged although with a higher share of current spending Policy discussions focused on composition and quality of spending transfers to public enterprises and natural resource revenues The authorities recently submitted a supplemental budget that increases the share of current spending for a higher wage bill and more social and public enterprise transfers but remains within program targets as a result of spending offsets and higher budget support The authorities are proposing an audit of large public enterprises to estimate needs for the medium term and inform reforms to reduce transfer needs The National Assembly did not approve a new mining taxation code by end 2013 as expected rather the draft code was sent back to the authorities for further consideration of investors concerns
