Lesson 1 (pg.4-6) This year we will be writing and reading so many exciting stories. We are going to start off by writing stories that are all about ourselves. These are called personal narratives. Today I'm going to begin by reading a personal narrative by this man George McClellan. We are going to be authors and think of small moments that we can write about from our own lives.	Lesson 1 (pg.7-10) Yesterday we read a story called "The Night of the Veggie Monster." In this story the author used all kinds of details. Do you remember any? Today let's look back at our anchor chart and think about a story you could write today?	Lesson 2 (pg. 11-20) I looked over so many of your stories last night. I loved reading and learning that give examples I noticed as I was reading that some of us had a hard time keeping our events in order and filling up our pages. Before you begin writing it is helpful to touch each page and think about what you are going to write. Example (pg.15) Today I want to teach you that after young writers come up with an idea they plan by touching, sketching, and writing. I touch, tell, sketch then write.	Lesson 3 (pg.21-25) This morning I was thinking about the story we wrote as a class when I visited the museum. I got to thinking about George McClellan and wondered if our story would make a good read aloud. Read Aloud Story Wow, that was a bit short. Let's think of some more things I could add to this. Today I want to teach you, when you think you're done, you've only just begun. We can always go back and add more. I took all the pictures on my page to help me add more to my words. Think who, where, when, what, how.	Lesson 3 (pg.26- I was looking at some of our writing yesterday and noticed several writers did something very special in their writing. They included how they were feeling. Today as you are writing and think of ideas for your writing see if you can think of some you felt during emotions.
