The journey to America was often long and hard. Immigrants had to travel across the ocean, often in crowded and uncomfortable conditions. They had to pay for their passage and for their food and clothing. They had to wait for days or even weeks before they could enter the country.

When they arrived, they had to go through a series of tests. They had to answer questions about their health and their background. They had to show that they had enough money to support themselves. If they failed any of these tests, they would be turned away.

For many immigrants, Ellis Island was both a place of hope and a place of despair. It was a place where they could start a new life, but it was also a place where they could be rejected and sent back to their home country.

Many immigrants lived in tenement housing because it was the only type of housing available to them. They had to pay high rents for the small, crowded rooms. Life in tenement housing was often very difficult and unhealthy.
