Environmental management accounting serves as a mechanism for identifying and measuring the full spectrum of environmental costs of current production processes and the economic benefits of pollution prevention or cleaner processes, and to integrate these costs and benefits into day-to-day business decision-making. For the last decade, corporate environmental accounting has gained increased importance in practice, of which cost accounting receives most attention. This paper gives an overview of the approaches of environmental cost accounting.

Key words: environmental cost, environmental protection, environmental management accounting

Introduction

In recent years, Environmental Management Accounting (EMA) has been attracting increasing attention throughout the world. There are various definitions of environmental management accounting, but essentially, an environmental management accounting system can be thought of as a management accounting system that has been refined so as to enable users of the system to be provided with information that reflects the environmental performance of the organisation. The United Nations Division for Sustainable Development has referred to environmental management accounting simply as "doing better, more comprehensive management accounting, while wearing an environmental hat that opens the eyes for hidden costs". The information generated from an environmental management accounting system might be of a financial nature (for example, the quantification of environmental costs), or it might be provided in physical terms (such as the amount of electricity used within a particular process). Either way, the motivation for developing such a system would be to provide a foundation for an organisation to improve both its environmental and financial performance.

Generally, companies are spending significant amount of money on pollution abatement and control. In most cases these costs represent the most obvious and most easily measured environmentally related costs. But it is only a top of an iceberg. Hidden environmental costs may be greater than expenditures to pollution abatement and control and uncovering of these hidden costs can provide significant opportunities for decision making and business planning.

Environmental Costs - Define and Classification

Which types of costs should be included under EMA? There is much debate on this subject because of the many different opinions as to the definition of the term environmental costs.

According to USA Environmental Protection Agency the definition of environmental cost depends on utilization of information in a company and the environmental costs can include conventional costs (raw materials and energy costs with the environmental relevance), potentially hidden costs (costs which are captured by accounting system but then lose their identity in overheads), contingent costs (costs in a future time - contingent liabilities), and image and relationship costs.

The Division for Sustainable Development of the United Nations has proposed a definition of environmental costs that distinguishes four types of costs:

- the first one is related to all the efforts made by organizations to reduce the environmental effects of their activities, by using "end-of-pipe" measures and technologies;
- the second one is related to all activities made by organizations to prevent their environmental effects before the end of the production process, for example, by using cleaner technologies, or by establishing environmental management systems;
- the third and fourth types of cost are defined on the idea that anything that does not enter the product produced by a company is a non-product output, such as wastes, waste water or lost energy, and that all costs associated to this non-product output are regarded as environmental costs. These include both the purchasing value of the materials and the production costs of producing the non-product output.

The IFAC Guidance document on EMA draws that distinction between "waste and emission control costs" and "prevention and other environmental management costs", which, together with research and development projects, help to reduce the material costs of non-product output and thus increase eco-efficiency.

The environmental cost categories by United Nations are:

- waste and emission treatment includes depreciation for related equipment; maintenance and operating materials and services; related personnel; fees, taxes, charges; fines and penalties; insurance for environmental liabilities; provisions for clean up costs, remediation;
- prevention and environmental management includes external services for environmental management; personnel for general environmental management activities; research and development; extra expenditure for cleaner technologies; other environmental management costs;

Sustainability Accounting and Reporting Stefan Schaltegger, Martin Bennett, Roger Burritt, 2006-09-14. This book provides an up-to-date overview of the most current developments in environmental and sustainability accounting and its links to reporting. This fourth volume in the Environmental Management Accounting Network (EMAN) series is characterized by a broad geographical and a contextual range of topics. Contributions from nearly all continents discuss new developments in environmental accounting and investigate topics and links between corporate environmental and sustainability issues as well as between strategy, measurement, and information management or between accounting and reporting. For the last five years, EMAN, the environmental and sustainability accounting network, has developed from a small, dedicated group of European academics to a full-fledged international network with strong links to corporate accounting and reporting practitioners, international organizations, and regulators. The network provides a platform for the exchange of ideas and the sharing of experiences with environmental and sustainability accounting and reporting. EMAN Global (www.eman-global.net) serves as an umbrella organisation of the regional sections in the Asia Pacific (EMAN AP), Europe (EMAN EU), Americas (EMAN AM), and Africa (EMAN AF). Based on the success of the annual conferences of the European and Asia Pacific sections, the American and African groups are planning their first workshops. The regional sections of EMAN have their own independent work agendas but are linked with each other through the steering committee of EMAN GLOBAL and by participating in other regional conferences, fora, and workshops. Environmental Law Reporter, 2002. The Green Bottom Line Martin Bennett, Peter

James, 2017-09-29. To date, both internal and external corporate environmental reporting and management systems have focused on physical input/output measures. However, external stakeholders are increasingly demanding that organisations provide more financial information about the costs and benefits of their environmental actions. As environmental costs rise, internal decision makers are also seeking such information to ensure that money is well spent. Beyond basic compliance, many companies will not countenance environmental actions for which a business case cannot be made. A number of companies, such as Baxter, BT, Xerox, Zeneca, and others, are now beginning to develop a better understanding of the costs and benefits of environmental action. The US Environmental Protection Agency has also done considerable work on models designed to understand the full costs of pollution control investments with the aim of demonstrating that when these are properly considered pollution prevention can be a more cost effective alternative The Green Bottom Line brings together much of the world's leading research and best practice case studies on the topic Divided into four sections covering General Concepts Empirical Studies Case Studies and Implementation the book includes case studies from the US EPA's Environment Accounting Programme and contributions from authors at institutions including the IMD INSEAD Tellus Institute and the World Resources Institute It constitutes a state of the art collection Environmental Costs and Liabilities Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, 1993 Environmental Cost/benefit Studies American Institute of Certified Public Accountants. Management Advisory Services Environmental Accounting Task Force, 1977 True Cost Accounting for Food Barbara Gemmill-Herren, Lauren E. Baker, Paula A. Daniels, 2021-06-22 This book explains how True Cost Accounting is an effective tool we can use to address the pervasive imbalance in our food system Calls are coming from all quarters that the food system is broken and needs a radical transformation A system that feeds many yet continues to create both extreme hunger and diet related diseases and one which has significant environmental impacts is not serving the world adequately This volume argues that True Cost Accounting in our food system can create a framework for a systemic shift What sounds on the surface like a practice relegated to accountants is ultimately a call for a new lens on the valuation of food and a new relationship with the food we eat starting with the reform of a system out of balance From the true cost of corn rice and water to incentives for soil health the chapters economically compare conventional and regenerative more equitable farming practices in and food system structures including taking an unflinching look at the true cost of cheap labour Overall this volume points towards the potential for our food system to be more human centred than profit centred and one that has a more respectful relationship to the planet It sets forth a path forward based on True Cost Accounting for food This path seeks to fix our current food metrics in policy and in practice by applying a holistic lens that evaluates the actual costs and benefits of different food systems and the impacts and dependencies between natural systems human systems agriculture and food systems This volume is essential reading for professionals and policymakers involved in developing and reforming the food system as well as students and scholars working on food policy food systems and sustainability Environmental Management Accounting Procedures and Principles, 2001 The Expert Working Group on Improving Government's Role in the Promotion of Environmental Management Accounting EMA was formed when it was realised that although a number of governments were interested in promoting EMA there was little communication between the agencies involved This the first publication of the Working Group presents the terminology and techniques used by its members It aims to establish a common understanding of the basic concepts of EMA and provide a set of principles and procedures to guide those interested in its application
