

DENSITY AND BUOYANCY

The image displays three overlapping worksheets titled "Density and Buoyancy". The central worksheet is fully visible and contains the following content:

Density and Buoyancy

Name: _____

Reading Passage

Read the passage carefully before answering the questions that follow.

Density is a measure of how much mass is contained within a given volume of a substance. It is calculated by dividing an object's mass by its volume and is expressed in units such as grams per cubic centimeter (g/cm<sup>3</sup>). Substances with higher density than water, such as metals, tend to sink when placed in water, whereas those with lower density, such as wood, float. Substances with lower density than water will float on water, while those with higher density will sink.

The buoyant force experienced by an object submerged in a fluid depends on the fluid's density and the volume of fluid displaced by the object. This principle, known as Archimedes' principle, explains why ships made of steel can float, although steel is much denser than water. The shape of a ship's hull allows a large volume of water (creating enough buoyant force) to keep it afloat. Density, for all liquids and gases, increases with pressure. For liquids, temperature and pressure have little effect on density, but for gases, density increases significantly with pressure and decreases with temperature.

Changes in density are also responsible for many natural phenomena. For instance, sea urchins can move between water and air because of their density. This allows them to float in water. The ability to float in water is also responsible for the survival of many aquatic organisms. In the ocean, differences in water density created by temperature and salinity variations form large-scale ocean currents that drive global climate. Understanding density and buoyancy helps explain everyday occurrences as well as complex environmental systems, highlighting the interconnectedness of these properties in the natural world.

True or False: Density and Buoyancy Concepts

Answer: True or False

1. An object with higher density than water will sink when placed in water. (T/F)
2. A ship floats because it displaces enough water to balance its weight, despite being made of heavy metal. (T/F)
3. For all liquids, the density of the liquid is denser than the objects it floats on. (T/F)
4. Sea urchins can move between water and air because of their density. (T/F)
5. Objects with less volume displace less fluid and experience less buoyant force. (T/F)

The other two worksheets on the left and right show similar questions and a list of 15 multiple-choice questions on the right side of the central page.
