Section 9: The Role of Dissemination in Learning Outcomes

- 11. Dissemination and Dissemination
  - a. Many government functions, administrative, executive, judicial, legislative, and regulatory, are organized.
  - b. One key responsibility assigned to self-government governments is to collect and disseminate to the general public information provided under their jurisdictional powers that govern their government and its operations.
  - c. Dissemination functions are carried out by Press, Media, and other information agencies (newspapers, television, radio, communication).
- 12. Representation
  - a. Government bodies, without exception, "speak with one voice," disseminate their decisions uniformly and consistently across government structures.
  - b. One key responsibility of a government is to provide representation, consistent and permanently, and disseminate information. Press conferences, communiques, statements of policies, and other communications, are given.
- 13. Control of Resources
  - a. A government is carrying out its functions and functions of the government need resources.
  - b. These resources are the standard measure by which a government measures its success. One government may be successful, other, despite having larger and greater total resources, is unsuccessful because its resources are not used effectively, perhaps due to poor management and leadership.
- 14. Reputation
  - a. One aspect of representation is the government's regular interaction with the public.
  - b. Government officials represent the government in their public functions. Their Press conferences are given to disseminate the government's communication to the public through self-reports.
- 15. Communication in Government Functions
  - a. In an administrative functions, one government function has certain key functions, referred to as functions, which are performed by other agencies, such as communications, planning, and others to regulate the economy, maintain law and order, and others.
  - b. Such functions, however, will communicate, without delay, their authority, functions, key functions, and responsibilities, through various channels, such as executive, legislative, and other functions, and other government functions. This requires a constant update, especially when changes occur, such as, policies, and other laws, to maintain the government's communication to the public.

Other studies have shown that the use of different types of software can increase the number of errors made by students, and that the use of different types of software can also increase the number of errors made by students, but not necessarily proportionally. These findings suggest that different types of software can affect the performance of students in different ways, and that different types of software can also affect the performance of students in different ways, but not necessarily proportionally.
