A 2014 systematic literature review of 100 studies published since 2000 and dated September 2014 found that "most researchers are interested in the effects of the program on the cognitive and behavioral outcomes of the children, but few studies have examined the effects on the parents' mental health." In the United States, the program is being implemented in a number of states, including California, where it is being implemented in a number of counties, including Los Angeles, Orange, and San Diego. In the United Kingdom, the program is being implemented in a number of areas, including London, where it is being implemented in a number of boroughs, including Westminster, Camden, and Islington. Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among different types of jobs. The subjects were 600 employees from a large manufacturing company who had been employed by the company for at least one year. They completed a questionnaire about their work activities and symptoms of musculoskeletal disorders. The results showed that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was higher among workers in jobs that required heavy lifting, repetitive motions, and prolonged standing than among workers in jobs that did not require these activities.
