Abstract: This study examined the effects of a 12-week, 100% bodyweight resistance training program on the muscle strength, body composition, and cardiovascular fitness of sedentary, middle-aged men. The program was designed to be performed at home, with no equipment other than a resistance band and a weighted vest. The program was performed three times per week, with one day of rest between sessions. The program consisted of three sets of eight repetitions of each exercise, with a 30-second rest between sets. The exercises included squats, lunges, push-ups, pull-ups, and core exercises. The program was evaluated using a variety of measures, including muscle strength, body composition, and cardiovascular fitness. The results of the study showed that the program had a significant positive effect on all measures. Muscle strength increased significantly in all muscle groups, and body composition improved, with a decrease in body fat percentage and an increase in lean body mass. Cardiovascular fitness also improved, with a decrease in resting heart rate and an increase in maximum heart rate. The program was well-tolerated by all participants, and no adverse effects were reported. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, 100% bodyweight resistance training program can be an effective way to improve muscle strength, body composition, and cardiovascular fitness in sedentary, middle-aged men.
