American Diploma Project Achieve:

Achieve & the American Diploma Project Network. Updated April 2012 Achieve, Inc,2012 At the 1996 National Education Summit a bipartisan group of governors and corporate leaders decided to create and lead an organization dedicated to supporting standards based education reform efforts across the states To do so they formed Achieve as an independent bi partisan non profit education reform organization This unique perspective has enabled Achieve to set a bold and visionary agenda over the past 15 years To make college and career readiness a priority in the states Achieve launched the American Diploma Project ADP Network in 2005 Starting with only a handful of states the Network has now grown to include 35 states educating 85 percent of all U S public school students This paper discusses how Achieve supports ADP Network states through multi state convenings regular Network wide communications and on the ground support While an impressive amount of progress has been made in the 15 years since Achieve was founded the reform movement is at a critical juncture where translating good policy into practice will be essential to getting results To that end Achieve will focus on 1 Common Core State Standards Implementation 2 Next Generation Science Standards 3 Partnership for Assessment of Readiness for College and Careers PARCC and 4 Advancing the College and Career Ready Agenda      Ready Or Not American Diploma Project,Achieve, Inc,2004      Common Core Dilemma Who Owns Our Schools? Mercedes K. Owens,2015-01-22 Owens provides a historical analysis of the ideological movements and reform efforts leading to the Common Core State Standards beginning with conservative criticism of public schools in the 1930s and culminating in a convergence of the political right and left in efforts to systemically reform education based on free market principles      Transformative Researchers and Educators for Democracy João M. contribution since it offers a crucial tool to help us articulate accurately a critical diagnosis as well as solutions for a more just and democratic public education that cultivates humanity Jurjo Torres Santom University of Corunha Spain This new collection Transformative Researchers and Educators for Democracy Dartmouth Dialogues is one of the most impressive outcomes of a critical transformative program at the University of Massachusetts Dartmouth Jo o M Paraskeva and Thad LaVallee provide their readers with a careful selection of chapters that explore the idea of critical and transformative leadership for a democratic conception of education focusing on a range of related themes in understanding the dimensions of cultural and organizational change A crucial volume focusing on aspects of the critique of neoliberal globalization in education and a needed book that insightfully combines critique and robust analysis with a utopian and positive agenda for critical transformation Michael A Peters University of Waikato NZ and University of Illinois Urbana Champaign USA This edited volume is the result of an amazing critical transformative program in educational leadership and policy studies chaired by Jo o M Paraskeva Paraskeva and LaVallee produced an important contribution to a timely topic that provides clear evidences that the free market model of education it is not a hope for good public education This book is not only important to US educators but it is really crucial for educators all over the world What is analyzed in this book is taking place in Europe Asia Latin America Africa and the Middle East Alvaro Moreira Hypolito University Federal de Pelotas Brasil American Diploma Project (ADP) End-of-Course Exams Achieve, Inc, 2009 To ensure that all high school graduates are prepared for the opportunities and challenges that await them states have increasingly been focused on aligning their end of high school expectations with the demands of the real world In 2005 no state had aligned their expectations with real world demands now 29 states have adopted college and career ready standards in English and or mathematics And as standards in mathematics have risen so too have graduation requirements Currently 19 states and District of Columbia require students to study mathematics through Algebra II or its equivalent in order to earn a high school diploma These policies are well grounded advanced mathematics courses such as Algebra II improve access to postsecondary education reduce the need for remediation and significantly increase the odds that a student will earn a degree Particularly for disadvantaged students advanced mathematics coursework in high school significantly narrows the equity gap improving access to and success in college and in future economic opportunities To assess these raised expectations a group of American Diploma Project ADP network states formed the ADP Assessment Consortium The Consortium created Algebra I and II end of course exams that provide an honest assessment of whether a student has mastered the content in the course they have just completed and is prepared for higher level mathematics coursework By design the tests are challenging States in the Consortium knew that what they were undertaking wouldn t be easy and that early results would be disappointing But they believed that by setting the bar appropriately high they could collectively challenge themselves their systems and their schools to improve secondary mathematics education for the benefit of all students The ADP Assessment Consortium states have shown that multistate partnerships are not just possible but that they can be a vehicle for driving change. The states have in fact been engaged in a voluntary race to the top. Even in the face of disappointing first year results for the ADP Algebra II exam and an economic recession that severely impacted state budgets these states have stayed the course giving more exams this year than last and willingly disclosing the results and the challenges they face. No state alone could do what the 15 Consortium states have managed together. While there is plenty of hard work ahead the ADP Assessment Consortium states have already demonstrated that they can move faster and more economically together than they ever could have going it alone. The report concludes that if states can be as successful on these critical next steps as they have been in creating the assessments they will have truly changed the prospects for their students by ensuring that student choices regarding their future college and career plans are based on having a strong foundation in mathematics that makes all paths possible. Science and Engineering for Grades 6-12 National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine, National Academy of Engineering, Division of Behavioral and Social Sciences and Education, Board on Science Education, Committee on Science Investigations and Engineering Design Experiences in Grades 6-12, 2019-03-12. It is essential for today's students to learn about science and engineering in order to make sense of the world around them and participate as informed members of a democratic society. The skills and ways of thinking that are developed and honed through engaging in scientific and engineering endeavors can be used to engage with evidence in making personal decisions to participate responsibly in civic life and to improve and maintain the health of the environment as well as to prepare for careers that use science and technology. The majority of Americans learn most of what they know about science and engineering as middle and high school students. During these years of rapid change for students knowledge attitudes and interests they can be engaged in learning science and engineering through schoolwork that piques their curiosity about the phenomena around them in ways that are relevant to their local surroundings and to their culture. Many decades of education research provide strong evidence for effective practices in teaching and learning of science and engineering. One of the effective practices that helps students learn is to engage in science investigation and engineering design. Broad implementation of science investigation and engineering design and other evidence based practices in middle and high schools can help address present day and future national challenges including broadening access to science and engineering for communities who have traditionally been underrepresented and improving students educational and life experiences. Science and Engineering for Grades 6-12: Investigation and Design at the Center revisits America's Lab Report Investigations in High School Science in order to consider its discussion of laboratory experiences and teacher and school readiness in an updated context. It considers how to engage today's middle and high school students in doing science and engineering through an analysis of evidence and examples. This report provides guidance for teachers, administrators, creators of instructional resources and leaders in teacher professional learning on how to support students as they make sense of phenomena, gather and analyze data.

information construct explanations and design solutions and communicate reasoning to self and others during science investigation and engineering design It also provides guidance to help educators get started with designing implementing and assessing investigation and design

Ready Or Not

Achieve, Inc., Washington, DC.,2004 The High School diploma has lost its value because what it takes to earn one is disconnected from what it takes for graduates to compete successfully beyond high school either in the classroom or in the workplace Re establishing the value of the diploma will require the creation of an inextricable link between high school exit expectations and the intellectual challenges that graduates invariably will face in credit bearing college courses or in high performance high growth jobs This report presents the starting point for restoring the value of the American high school diploma by describing in specific terms the English and mathematics that graduates must have mastered by the time they leave high school if they expect to succeed in postsecondary education or in high performance high growth jobs The report also presents actual workplace tasks and postsecondary assignments that illustrate the practical application of the must have competencies described in the benchmarks themselves The American Diploma Project's college and workplace readiness benchmarks offer the solid foundation upon which states can raise academic expectations and build education systems that will enable students to reach these goals Without clear academic expectations that have currency beyond 12th grade as those described in this report do states efforts to improve high schools undoubtedly will fail Contains 17 endnotes This report was prepared by The American Diploma Project ADP at Achieve Inc
