

in the lock mechanism may be adjusted to allow the door inside remote control handle to be moved backward and forward (free-wheel) without unlocking the door. The free-wheeling feature consists of a tie bar and a free-wheeling trip lever which are incorporated into the lock. The trip lever can be shifted to put the lock either in free-wheeling position or in normal operating position. Access to this shifting free-wheeling trip lever is gained through the lock bolt slot with the bolt in the normal unlocked position at the bottom of the slot.

To adapt the door lock to "free-wheeling" it is necessary to insert an adjusting tool through the lock bolt slot in door pillar facing, engage the control lever, and trip the lever away from the door facing (fig. 34). When the control lever is in this position and the door lock button "down" (door locked), the inside remote control handle will "free wheel". If the lock button is "up" (door unlocked), the inside remote control handle will not "free wheel" but will operate the door lock.

Fig. 34—Adapting Lock to "Free-Wheeling"

To remove the lock from "free-wheeling" operation, insert an adjusting tool through the lock bolt slot in door pillar facing, engage the control lever, and pull the lever toward the pillar facing (fig. 35).

To trip the "free-wheeling" control lever use a piece of wire approximately 6 or 7 inches in length with a hook of approximately  $\frac{1}{4}$ - $\frac{3}{8}$  inch on one end. The control lever is approximately on a level with the lock attaching screw located above the bolt slot, and either  $1\frac{1}{4}$  or  $2\frac{1}{4}$  inches forward of the pillar facing, depending on whether or not the lock is in "free-wheeling". This operation is accomplished chiefly by "feel" and to trip the control lever requires a very small amount of "push" or "pull" on the adjusting tool. Bear this fact in mind, for it may be used as a guard against pulling off the tie bar return spring (fig. 36).

In a few instances it may be found that when the control lever is in "free-wheeling", the inside remote control handle will not operate the door lock regardless of the position of the door lock button. This condition results from too much end play in the remote control linkage and is caused by improper adjustment of the door lock remote control mechanism. To correct: Remove the door trim pad, loosen the (3) attaching screws "A" (fig. 5) holding the regulator to the door inner panel and rotate the remote control mechanism to remove all play in the linkage and thus provide full effective travel for the remote control handle.
