Invertebrates and Fungi on Terrestrial Ecosystems David Langor, Jon Sweeney, 2009-01-21 Since the arrival of Europeans about 500 years ago an estimated 50 000 non native species have been introduced to North America including Hawaii Non native species figure prominently in our lives often as ornamentals sources of food or pests Although many introduced species are beneficial there is increasing awareness of the enormous economic costs associated with non native pests In contrast the ecological impacts of non native species have received much less public and scientific attention despite the fact that invasion by exotic species ranks second to habitat destruction as a cause of species loss In particular there is little information about the ecological impacts of hyper diverse groups such as terrestrial fungi and invertebrates A science symposium Ecological impacts of non native invertebrates and fungi on terrestrial ecosystems held in 2006 brought together scientists from the USA and Canada to review the state of knowledge in this field of work Additional reviews were solicited following the symposium The resulting set of review synthesis papers and case studies represents a cross section of work on ecological impacts of non native terrestrial invertebrates and fungi Although there is a strong focus on Canadian work there is also significant presentation of work in the northern USA and Europe New Zealand Plant Protection ,2006

Evaluation of Risk Assessment of Mountain Pine Beetle Infestations Caren C. Dymond,2007 This study is part of a series of research papers that explore the biological social and economic aspects of British Columbia s mountain pine beetle epidemic In this paper an established decision support system was evaluated for operational use Digital forest inventory and beetle impact survey data were integrated in standard GIS software for rating susceptibility and risk of mountain pine beetle infestation The beetle impact data collected over a three year period provided an opportunity to generate risk on a given year and compare it to attacks in the subsequent year Includes text from Government of Canada publications site and from document The Coleopterists' Bulletin ,2006 Proceedings of the 12th Workshop on Electronics for LHC and Future Experiments, Valencia, Spain, 25-29 September 2006 ,2007 American Book Publishing Record ,2004
