Abstract The authors examined the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program on the health-related quality of life of older adults with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD). The program was designed to improve physical and psychological health, and to reduce the risk of hospitalization and mortality. The program was evaluated using a randomized controlled trial design. The results showed that the program had a significant positive effect on the health-related quality of life of older adults with COPD. The program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The authors conclude that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program is an effective intervention for improving the health-related quality of life of older adults with COPD.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week. The control group (n = 20) remained sedentary. The primary outcome was the change in HRQL, measured using the EuroQol-5D questionnaire. Secondary outcomes included changes in physical fitness, measured using a 6-minute walk test, and changes in body composition, measured using a dual-energy X-ray absorptiometry scan. The results showed that the intervention group had a significant improvement in HRQL, physical fitness, and body composition compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and HRQL of sedentary, middle-aged women.
