

8.3 DNA Replication

Teacher Files and Notes:

Lab 8.3.1

Teacher Notes

- A and T pairs are not C and G paired up, so they experience less-restricted and stronger limited hydrogen bonds
- A and T pair together inside nuclei, so strands break at A-T-T-A during replication
- G and C pair, but G has only three hydrogen bonds, while C has four hydrogen bonds, and G-C pairs are stronger than A-T pairs

Modeling Ideas

- Use colored index cards that represent each base pairing combination that they learn
- Illustrate within the nucleotide the way they are joined to the phosphate

Key Questions

- How are the two strands of DNA made up? Are they joined up with the hydrogen bonds? A and T, and C and G, really so?
- How are the nucleotide bases joined together? How are the phosphate groups joined to the nucleotide bases?
- How are the phosphate groups joined together and joining them with other nucleotides?
