8.1.1 Case Studies

8.1.1.1 Newbury, UK

After the 2001 census, the town of Newbury in the English county of Berkshire was reclassified as a conurbation. This had previously required reworking designs and infrastructure for the town. Newbury's town council decided to take advantage of the increased popularity, without changing the town. Newbury town council organized three town trials. They found a conclusion for which Newbury's town council is very positive with. However, they also found a different conclusion which they were not so positive with. The following section will discuss the trials and their outcomes.

8.1.1.2 Newbury Trials

There were three trials of different designs. The following table gives a brief overview of the trials and their outcomes:

Design	Outcome
1. Newbury's original design (the original design, plus a few changes)	Success. The trials were a success, and the town council decided to keep the original design, plus a few changes.
2. A design with a raised platform, with a ramp and a staircase, and a small bridge connecting the two levels.	Failure. The trials were a failure, and the town council decided to keep the original design, plus a few changes.
