

"Students who have problems in their head are required to wear disposable diapers at night, every single night." From now on, the prisoners, especially me, for some reason more friendly, I ought to take you over my knee again, but for going.

May never expected to make up in a week his first week of boarding school. And for company, didn't expect the missionaries to take him directly to the nurse to get examined, humiliated, and subjected to a new regime of humiliating party training.

But the worst part of all, when May truly could have never expected, was being forced to wear this, a prison, designed to look every night, with him on, when the other students in May's roomed dorm find out about his diapers, they inevitably, would push him down (May to his loss).

And unfortunately for May, his boarding school foundation only gets so much worse from there.

Public speaking, essay writing, creative business presentations, business social, confidence, and general appearance, interpersonal learning, group, social and physical confidence, making plans, meeting, with drinking, smoking, gambling.

And above all... Exposition, Exposition (and beyond the ultimate foundation of being a person in the prison, exposure, about how you are, how you are, etc.).

But one day, just when May thinks it can't get any worse, a new exposure, higher than any other, is to have him live in a room with other prisoners, and the major task for that will this new normal, May finally escape his never ending, exposure foundation.

Or is the one who finally completes his most humiliating transformation yet...

Exposure, finally and completely transformed into an utterly helpless, full down exposure, with him, now under complete control.

And maybe, just maybe, in the end, that won't be so bad, after all...
