A Modest Proposal by Jonathan Swift

Satire is always a critique of some form of human behavior, vice, or folly, with the intent of persuading the audience to view it disdainfully and thereby encourage a degree of social change. A Modest Proposal is a responsive essay to one of the most common sentiments of English landlords that the Irish, considered as filthy, subhuman and even poor. They were having too many children which were becoming too much of a burden to them and the society, and couldn't afford to buy food for them. England was filled with a great number of Irish families in Seventeenth and Eighteenth centuries. Swift proposes an inhumane but temporary and non-serious suggestion regarding to the context that Children must be sold to be eaten by the wealthy and influencing persons during their infancy age to earn some money. Considering the sympathetic and satiric statements from Swift, this proposal leaves the readers in an ethical dilemma which makes it more of a persuasive argument to have a belief of hope and change. In 1729, people actually took Swift's literacy as Irony due to its rigidity and exposure in the proposal as Swift was threatened to death. But people due to illiteracy couldn't focus the scathing remarks put forth regarding landlords as he is critiquing. This intentionally reforms his wishes to see the usage of local resources rather than foreign and mercy on most of the tenants. Swift uses verbal irony to say the opposite of what he means. (LeBocuef).

In 1729 England had deliberately created Ireland's merchant marine, agriculture and its growing woolen industry. Ireland being in the bottom-brawl of England didn't take any preventive actions possibly reasoned by illiteracy and inactivity which had caused them lose everything. Minority Protestants supported England to take over the parliament to force discriminatory inheritance laws which broke up large Catholic estates and put them at the mercy of rapidly consolidating Protestant landlords. England gained leverage and foothold in Ireland, legislations were enacted which
