

NATURE VS NURTURE

Nature versus nurture is an ongoing debate about the degree to which human behaviour is determined by genetic inheritance (nature) or learned through interactions with the environment (nurture).

NURTURE

Explanations suggesting behaviour is determined by the environment and personal experiences. They believe all human characteristics are a result of social and material environmental factors that influence development from birth onwards.

Petrie, M. (1920) conducted a case study on a child known as 'Little Albert' to see if it was possible to condition a child to fear an unfamiliar rat. Result: object.

- Little Albert showed no fear response to any stimulus before the experiment.
- Little Albert was presented with a white rat. Each time he reached for it, a loud noise was played (unconditioned stimulus). Albert responded to the rat alone crying and rapidly 'locking' away, which took him to his crying fit.
- The fear had been transferred to other looking objects, including a rabbit and a fur coat.
- One month later, Albert continued to show fear reactions to all similar objects. This provided evidence that the environment can manipulate to create a phobic response and behavioural change.

Zimbardo (1972) conducted the Stanford Prison Experiment to investigate the effects that roles and the environment can have on people's behaviour.

- 24 male volunteers were randomly assigned to the role of "guards" or "guards".
- A simulated prison was built in the basement of the psychology building at Stanford University.
- Guards were given authority, uniforms, batons, whistles and dominantly in the body of control and power.
- As a result, guards beat their roles, their behaviour was dominantly in the body of control and power.
- The experiment ended after 6 days, when the guards became extremely cruel and nearly 100% of them had been accepted into just six days.

The Humanistic Approach – believes their behaviour is influenced by their personal and environmental factors of their world.

The Behaviourist Approach – behaviour is learned through a process of conditioning.

The Social Approach – explains their behaviour is influenced by other people's behaviour.

PROBLEMS WITH THE NATURE VS NURTURE DEBATE

1. It is reductionist because it states that behaviour is solely caused by genetic factors or experience.
2. It is deterministic because it suggests behaviour is determined by hereditary factors, while environmental suggest that behaviour is the result of interactions with the environment.
3. It is difficult to control variables. For example, the variables in this study could not be controlled because all influences cannot be isolated.

NATURE

Naturalists argue that behaviour is caused by innate characteristics that are passed down our ancestors and form our genetic make-up. These features are passed on with our behaviour, because we are programmed from birth, and either build on our genetic programming or alter it.

Genes and Traits (1903) involved twin and adoption studies to determine whether inheritance influenced behaviour than a genetic link.

Adoption studies found an increased occurrence of schizophrenia in adopted children with schizophrenia parents. Children of schizophrenia parents and adopted parents of schizophrenia children showed little evidence of schizophrenia. This indicates a significant genetic input into the onset of schizophrenia.

Twin studies found a higher concordance rate for schizophrenia in identical twins than non-identical twins. On average, there is a 50% probability that both individuals in a pair will have a certain characteristic, given that one of them has that characteristic. Interestingly, there was a concordance rate of 50% in identical twins, compared to 12% in non-identical twins.

Phenomen (1988) found that the overall heritability of IQ is identical and monozygous twins, which indicates identical twins are influenced by genetics. Dizygous twins only identical twins that have a greater genetic load, the heritability rate increased to 0.74, which means they have 74% of their behaviour being due to genetic influences, environment, and other environmental influences.

The Biological Approach – believes behaviour is controlled by the brain, using all other factors as influences.

NATURE AND NURTURE INTERACTION

Psychologists generally agree that behaviour is a result of the interaction between nature and nurture.

Psychologists believe that either nature or nurture can have an impact on behaviour, but they argue that both are important.

Margulis et al. (2000) conducted a study on rats to show how behaviour is influenced by the environment.

They found when rats live in a complex environment, they have a higher cognitive ability. This is through the production of more neurotrophins. These neurotrophins, such as BDNF, or brain-derived neurotrophins, are involved in the development of the brain. They are also involved in the production of new neurons, which are called neurogenesis. Neurogenesis is important for the production of new neurons.

Complex environments stimulate the production of neurotrophins.

It is interesting that other factors can influence an individual's behaviour, such as their home.

The Psychodynamic Approach – looks at unconscious and conscious thoughts and feelings. Dreams and childhood experiences are important for behaviour.

The Cognitive Approach – focuses on how people process information. Cognitive approaches believe behaviour is influenced by experiences.

The Developmental Approach – looks at how behaviour changes over time. It is concerned with how behaviour is influenced by experiences.
