Financial Literacy and Stock Market Participation

Maarten van Rooij, Annamaria Lusardi, Rob Alessie, 2007 Individuals are increasingly put in charge of their financial security after retirement Moreover the supply of complex financial products has increased considerably over the years However we still have little or no information about whether individuals have the financial knowledge and skills to navigate this new financial environment To better understand financial literacy and its relation to financial decision making we have devised two special modules for the DNB Household Survey We have designed questions to measure numeracy and basic knowledge related to the working of inflation and interest rates as well as questions to measure more advanced financial knowledge related to financial market instruments stocks bonds and mutual funds We evaluate the importance of financial literacy by studying its relation to the stock market Are more financially knowledgeable individuals more likely to hold stocks To assess the direction of causality we make use of questions measuring financial knowledge before investing in the stock market We find that while the understanding of basic economic concepts related to inflation and interest rate compounding is far from perfect it outperforms the limited knowledge of stocks and bonds the concept of risk diversification and the working of financial markets We also find that the measurement of financial literacy is very sensitive to the wording of survey questions This provides additional evidence for limited financial knowledge Finally we report evidence of an independent effect of financial literacy on stock market participation Those who have low financial literacy are significantly less likely to invest in stocks Journal of Economic Literature ,2014 Abstract Proceedings of the Galaxy II Conference ,2004

Information Retrieval & Library Automation ,1997 Working Paper Series ,2000 Instructor ,2004 Choice, Chance, and Wealth Dispersion at Retirement Steven F. Venti,David A. Wise,2000 People earn just enough to get by is a phrase often used to explain the low personal saving rate in the United States The implicit presumption is that households simply do not earn enough to pay for current needs and to save We show in this paper that at all levels of lifetime earnings there is an enormous dispersion in the accumulated wealth of families approaching retirement It is not only households with low incomes that save little a significant proportion of high income households also saves little And a substantial proportion of low income households save a great deal We then consider the extent to which differences in household lifetime financial resources explain the wide dispersion in wealth given lifetime earnings We find that very little of this dispersion can be explained by chance differences in individual circumstances largely outside the control of individuals that might limit the resources from which saving might plausibly be made We also consider how much of the dispersion in wealth might be accounted for by different investment choices of savers some more risky some less risky given lifetime earnings We find that investment choice is not a major determinant of the dispersion in asset accumulation It matters about as much as chance events that limit the available resources of households with the same lifetime earnings We conclude that the bulk of the dispersion must be attributed to differences to in the amount that households choose to save The differences in saving choices among households with similar lifetime earnings lead to vastly different levels of asset accumulation by the time retirement age approaches Parliamentary Debates (Hansard).
