Challenges and Channels Ikram Ahmed Ibrahim Elsherif, Piers Michael Smith, 2016-06-22 This book deals with the challenges of teaching the English language and literature in the Middle East and North Africa region with a special focus on the Gulf countries. It consists of different articles by an international group of educators and scholars who have first hand experience in teaching the English language and its literatures in this region. The contributors not only investigate student attitudes, cultural, political and administrative obstacles and challenges, but they also embark upon soul searching journeys in which they examine their own attitudes, teaching strategies, cultural prejudices and preconceptions and personal responses to their teaching environments. They also explore from their own personal experiences the crisis in the humanities, cultural hegemony, ethics in translation, cross cultural encounters, pedagogical challenges, textuality and second language acquisition among other issues and concerns. As such the book represents both a scholarly investigation and a colorful palette of personal experience and response to human encounters in the classroom.

This volume examines modern Arabic literature in context and introduces creative teaching methods that reveal the literature's richness, relevance and power to anglophone students. Addressing the complications of translation head on, the volume interweaves such important issues such as gender, the Palestinian-Israeli conflict and the status of Arabic literature in world literature. Essays cover writers from the recent past like Emile Habiby and Tayeb Salih, contemporary Palestinian, Egyptian and Syrian literatures and the literature of the nineteenth century Nahda.
