Reading Passage and Activities

Foot binding was a traditional Chinese custom that involved binding the feet of young girls to make them smaller. The practice began in the Tang dynasty (618-907) and continued until the 20th century. It was most common in the southern part of China, particularly among the upper classes. The process involved binding the feet of a young girl when she was between 5 and 10 years old. The feet were wrapped in tight bands, which caused the bones to deform and the toes to curl under. This was done to make the feet look like small, delicate flowers. The practice was considered a sign of beauty and status. It was also believed to have medicinal properties, such as improving circulation and reducing swelling. However, it was a残酷 and painful practice that often resulted in long-term health problems, including foot drop and gangrene. In 1911, the Chinese government banned the practice, and it was officially declared illegal in 1949. Today, it is no longer practiced in China.
