1. INTRODUCTION

We all know that biology is not a boring subject because it is the science of life or living matter in all its forms and phenomena, especially concerning origin, growth, reproduction, structure, and behavior (Bagley, 2014). Teachers must use some techniques, strategies, or approaches in the class so that the subject itself will be enjoyable and very attractive to the learners. Thus, it is a great challenge to the part of the teacher to make the subject mastery. In Bryner's survey, 73 percent said, "I didn't like the school." 61 percent said, "I didn't like the teachers." 60 percent said, "I didn't see the value in the work I was being asked to do." And lastly, about 25 percent said, "No adults in the school cared about me" (Bryner, 2007).

Michael Linsin (2012) says that there are eight things teachers do to cause boredom. First is sitting too long. Although it's important to increase your students' stamina for both paying attention during lessons and focusing during independent work, if they're made to sit too long, you're asking for trouble. Good teachers are observant and thus learn to know precisely when to switch gears and get their students up and moving. Second is talking too much. Students need room to breathe or they'll form an unspoken mutiny and turn your classroom upside down. The more economical and concise you are with your words; then, the more attentive your students will be. The third is making the simple, complex. Teachers do make their instruction more complex, more involved, more verbose which is a major reason why students don't progress. Effective teachers simplify, break down, and cut away the unimportant contents to make it easier for students to understand. Fourth is making the interesting, uninteresting. Most students assume that most subjects are boring to learn. It's your job to make the subject more interesting. The fifth is talking about behavior instead of doing something about it. Teachers who struggle with classroom management tend to talk endlessly about behavior. They revisit the same tired topic over and over. Effective classroom management is about action. It's about doing and following through and holding students accountable. Sixth is directing too much, observing too little. Most teachers are in constant motion like directing, guiding, handholding, and micromanaging students from one moment to the next. This is not only remarkably inefficient, but it dampens enthusiasm for school. Instead, rely on sharp, well-taught routines to keep your students awake, alive, and responsible for every transition and repeatable moment of your day while you observe calmly from a distance. Seventh is leading a slow, sloppy, slipshod pace. Good teaching strives for a focus and efficiency of time, movement, and energy. The day crackles and glides cleanly from one lesson or activity to the next. As soon as one objective is met, it's on to the next without delay. And eighth is failing to adjust. Regardless of what you're trying to squeeze in by the end of the day, you must adjust. Sometimes all your students need is a moment to stretch their legs or say hello to a friend. Other times, you'll simply move on to something else.

One thing to cope up with the student's negative behavior inside the classroom, teachers will do some educational games. According to Lewis (2016), games are a regular part
