One Health: The Well-being Impacts of Human-nature Relationships Eric Brymer, Elizabeth Louise Freeman, Miles Richardson, 2019-11-07 In recent years there has been a growing body of evidence from fields such as public health architecture ecology landscape forestry psychology sport science psychiatry geography suggesting that nature enhances psychological health and wellbeing Physical activity in the presence of nature feelings of connection to nature engagement with nature specific environmental features e g therapeutic water and trees and images of real and virtual nature have all been posited as important wellbeing facilitators Thus the association between natural environments and health outcomes might be more complex than initially understood Pritchard Richardson Sheffield Karmanov Freeman Akhurst 2015 in the development of wellbeing and health outcomes Furthermore traditional theoretical notions such as Biophilia topophilia restoration theories and stress reduction theories typically used to interpret findings are also being critiqued Often one of the main barriers for practitioners is the vast array of theories that claim to effectively explain research findings but that tend to be only partially relevant e g for Physical activity or restoration focus on the characteristics of the person e g nature relatedness and only some features of the landscape e g therapeutic landscapes This special edition therefore brings together cutting edge ideas and research from a wide set of disciplines with the purpose of exploring interdisciplinary or trans disciplinary approaches to understanding the psychological health and wellbeing benefits of human nature interactions

Ecosystem restoration and inland food fisheries in developing countries Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations,2023-08-09 The review presents the strong business case for inland food fisheries in developing countries to be either a co benefit or very often the main benefit of ecosystem restoration In view of the current state of inland water aquatic habitats the potential for restoration is high Realizing this potential requires concerted action to overcome current challenges foremost of which is the invisibility of inland fisheries in many policy arenas as well as technical and scientific fora The drivers of ecosystem degradation ecosystem services valuation frameworks and the main technical tools for implementing interventions are presented Experiences in developed countries dominate the literature but are not necessarily applicable to developing country inland food fisheries Local communities that have high dependency on inland fisheries and live in close association with inland water fisheries habitats not only provide much higher fisheries values but a management asset that is unavailable in developed countries and the mainstay of many successful restoration programmes Ten case studies representing effective restoration of food fisheries from local to basin scale are used to illustrate what can be achieved The prospects of inland fisheries benefiting from or contributing to the UN Decade on Ecosystem Restoration 2021 2030 are good but upscaling the existing progress will require increased and sustained efforts to mainstream the values of inland fisheries including their co benefits for biodiversity conservation
