

3.1 When brake pedal is not operative

- With vacuum supplied to the constant pressure and variable pressure chambers and no brake pedal force, both the atmospheric pressure valve and vacuum valve close. The vacuum booster system balances and provides no boosting action.

3.2 When brake pedal is depressed

3.2.1 Vacuum booster operation

- As the brake pedal is depressed, the pedal force acts on the operating rod. This opens the atmospheric pressure valve, allowing outside air into the variable pressure chamber. There is now a pressure difference between the constant and variable pressure chambers. The pedal force, which is boosted as a result of the pressure difference between the chambers works on the brake master cylinder via the push rod.

3.2.2 Brake master cylinder operation

- The push rod moves to push in the primary and secondary pistons. The supply orifice of the secondary piston goes over the primary cup and the fluid passage to the reservoir tank is blocked. As a result, fluid pressure builds up in the chamber D in front of the secondary piston.
- The fluid pressure is sent to the rear brake system.
- At the same time, the supply orifice of the primary piston goes over the primary cup and the fluid passage to the reservoir tank is blocked. As a result, fluid pressure builds up in the chamber C. The fluid pressure is sent to the front brake system.
