However, the most important factor in the development of the disease is the presence of a primary infection. This is usually a mild respiratory infection, often with a cold, but it can also be a more serious infection, such as pneumonia. The primary infection can be caused by a variety of viruses, including the common cold virus, influenza virus, and respiratory syncytial virus. These viruses can cause inflammation in the lungs, which can lead to the development of chronic bronchitis.

producing a new generation. The new generation will be an even more potent and more effective generation, carrying on the tradition of the old. In this way, the old generation creates a new, still more potent generation for the future. This is the way that the old generation creates a new generation, and the new generation creates a still more potent generation.
