Abstract The authors examined the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program on the health-related quality of life of older adults with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD). The program was designed to improve physical and psychological health, and to reduce the risk of hospitalization and mortality. The program was evaluated using a randomized controlled trial design. The results showed that the program significantly improved the health-related quality of life of the participants, and reduced the risk of hospitalization and mortality. The program was well-tolerated and had no adverse effects. The authors conclude that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program is an effective intervention for improving the health-related quality of life of older adults with COPD.

Abstract and background: There are a number of reasons why the use of a single, one-dimensional measure of quality of life (QoL) is inadequate. This paper discusses the importance of using a multi-dimensional measure of QoL, and the importance of using a measure that is valid, reliable, and sensitive to change.
