

Planning for Taxes

The planning process should always take taxes into account. Investments in equity securities are often made with the intent to defer taxes on investment gains. For the majority of stock market investments, taxes are the best way to defer taxes on investment gains. Other investments, such as real estate, bonds, and cash equivalents, often defer taxes on investment gains. Other assets, such as art, collectibles, and other valuable items, may have tax consequences if held long enough. These assets may defer taxes on investment gains, but they may also have tax consequences if held long enough.

Investment taxes can be avoided by the investment of investment choices that reduce taxes on capital gains. For example, the growth of the S&P 500 is taxed at 15% (long-term capital gains) or 20% (short-term capital gains). Investment choices that reduce taxes on capital gains will reduce taxes on investment gains. For example, using the tax-free contributions to a Roth IRA will reduce taxes on investment gains. Other investment choices, such as a 401(k) or a 403(b), will also reduce taxes on investment gains. These investment choices will reduce taxes on investment gains, but they will also reduce the amount of investment gains available for investment.
