Such a commitment is not in place now, and the lack of a clear strategy to move to a more sustainable energy system is the main reason why that transition will be slow. The introduction of such a commitment will be a significant step forward in ensuring that energy systems are more aligned with economic, social and environmental goals. The proposed commitment would also bring with it a greater sense of accountability and transparency, and would encourage more public, transparent and participatory decision-making in the energy sector. This would be a significant step forward, bringing with it a more sustainable energy system, and a more sustainable future for all.
