

Answers: Advanced Geometry Semester 1

These results suggest that both gutierrezae and multicarinata species are broadly common, although with different geographic distributions. However, we are optimistic that given enough time the multicarinata species described here will be found to have a more extensive geographic distribution, and that the gutierrezae species will eventually prove to have a more restricted geographic distribution. It is of considerable interest to note, however, that a number of species appear to have very limited distributions, particularly multicarinata and gutierrezae.
