Human Body Organs

Kidneys

Kidneys are the body's natural filters. They regulate the balance of fluids and waste in the body. They are located in the back of the body, one on each side of the spine. They filter out toxins and excess fluid from the blood, and then excrete them as urine. They also help to regulate blood pressure and produce hormones that control the body's metabolism.

Stomach

Stomach is a muscular organ that is part of the digestive system. It is located in the upper abdomen, just below the diaphragm. It is responsible for breaking down food into smaller pieces that can be absorbed by the body. It also produces stomach acid, which helps to break down food and kill bacteria.

Small Intestine

Small intestine is a long, coiled tube that is part of the digestive system. It is located in the lower abdomen, below the stomach. It is responsible for absorbing nutrients from the food that has been broken down in the stomach. It also produces enzymes that help to break down food.

Large Intestine

Large intestine is a long, coiled tube that is part of the digestive system. It is located in the lower abdomen, below the small intestine. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the food that has been broken down in the small intestine. It also produces mucus, which helps to lubricate the passage of stool.

Heart

Head of the body's circulatory system, the heart is a muscular organ that pumps blood throughout the body. It is located in the chest, between the lungs. It is responsible for circulating oxygenated blood to the rest of the body and deoxygenated blood back to the lungs. The heart has four chambers: two atria and two ventricles.

Liver

Liver is a large, reddish-brown organ that is located in the upper right abdomen. It is the largest internal organ in the body. It is responsible for a variety of functions, including filtering toxins from the blood, producing bile to help with digestion, and storing energy. It also plays a role in the production of certain hormones.

Lungs

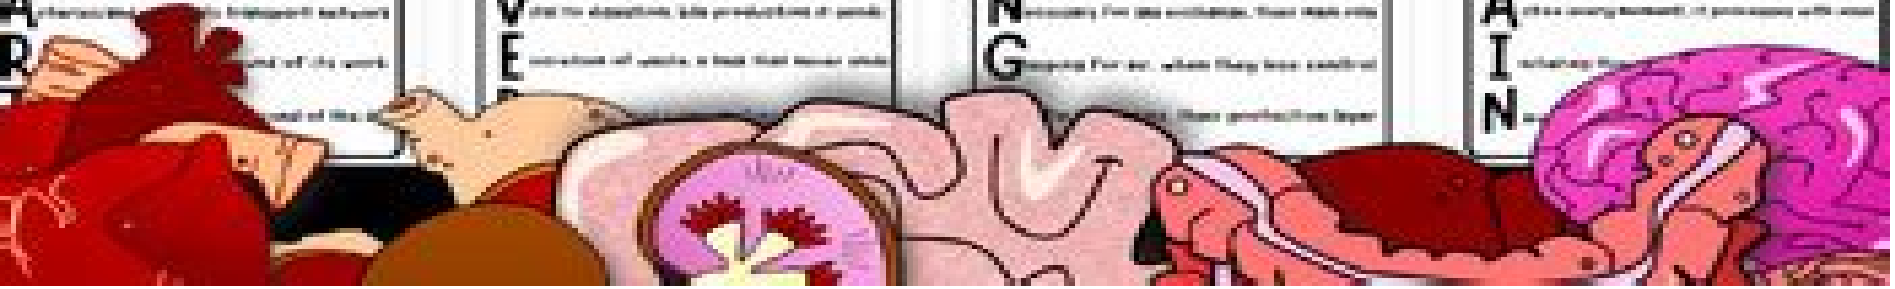

Lungs are a pair of organs in the chest that are responsible for breathing. They are located on either side of the heart. They take in oxygen from the air and expel carbon dioxide. The lungs are made of spongy tissue and are covered in a thin layer of fluid that helps them to expand and contract.

Brain

Brain is the central organ of the nervous system. It is located in the head, protected by the skull and meninges. It is responsible for controlling all of the body's functions, from movement to thought. The brain is made of gray matter, which is the outer layer, and white matter, which is the inner layer. It is also made of billions of neurons that communicate with each other.
