...Just as wheat is the grain most commonly used for bread in the regions of the Old World, which are Europe, Asia, and Africa, so in the New World the most widely used grain is maize, which is found in almost all the kingdoms of the West Indies, in Peru, New Spain, the New Kingdom of Granada, Guatemala, Yucatan, and in all the Yucatan times.

Maize grows on sandy or rocky, earthy soil (very wet or very dry, for which the grain is sown), and though the grain is not very hard a large number of them, and some contain seven hundred grains. The seeds are planted one by one, about three or four inches apart. It grows in many parts of the Indies in great abundance.

Maize is the Indian bread, and their community eat it boiled in the grain, but, when it is called maize, another and more pleasing way of preparing it, which consists in grinding the maize and making the flour into panecitos, which are put on the fire and are later placed on the table and eaten plain hot. ### Key Concept - 1.2.1.A

European nations' efforts to explore and conquer the New World stemmed from a search for new sources of wealth, economic and military competition, and a desire to spread Christianity.

They are very well made, with very handsome bodies, and very good countenances... They neither carry nor know anything of arms, for I showed them swords, and they took them for flat disks and cut themselves through ignorance. They have no iron, their darts being made without iron, some of them having a bit of tooth at the end, and others being pointed in various ways. They are all of fair stature and very intelligent faces, and well made... They should be good servants, and intelligent, for I observed that they readily took to what was said to them, and believe that they would easily be made Christian, for I appeared to them that they had no religion...
