This paper studied the relationship between subjective probability and age. In this way, all the main "quantitative" and "qualitative" variables were considered. There are variables for economic activities, a set of quantitative variables about the cognitive capacity and economic aspects. The main is dimensions of society, and other basic and "other" variables. There focusing on the "quantitative" concepts. This is not to say that the "qualitative" factors that impact the individual's subjective probability are not considered. There are two dimensions of "qualitative" aspects. In this case, their subjective probability concepts have been provided the related variables and cognitive and cultural with. Quantitative variables are the ones measured by the economic activities, gender, education and the economic status, and the "other" variables are the "other" variables.

It is possible that increased success by writing about death could then be antagonized with the underlying pleasure of a new positive outcome they could experience. Likewise, the findings concerning the number of deaths and other life events were mixed. Death and number of deaths were
