Attending Trade School over College

Many people may assume that attending trade school is less successful than going to college. There are many misinterpretations that an employer might prefer a college graduate over a trade school graduate. In actuality, this can be misleading because there are many more opportunities of a person going from trade school instead of a college. The benefits include but are not limited to the "Smaller student to teacher ratios" will lighten the work load for teachers, enabling them to focus on the quality rather than the quantity of their teaching and grading. However there are many people, that believe trade schools benefits outweigh college benefits.

There is no need for everyone to get a college degree when they can be trained in trades that can offer a job and a paycheck. USA still needs mechanics and carpenters. Without these key workers America wouldn't be able to function properly. The people need to start encouraging its communities to go to trade school because that is where the jobs that make good money are. A college background used to be the way out to get a good paying job but
