FTT in particular have been adopted in the context of benefits trade offs and policy implications in selected developing countries. In fact, experience from some African and Asian countries points to the need for a context driven balance that ensures that the gains associated with the use of this new technique can be realized without making expensive compromises, especially in terms of fisheries resources status and trade dynamics. Policy and regulatory frameworks need to be informed by a risk based approach and supportive of consistent benchmarking and differentiation of FTT products. This document reviews the lessons from those countries and makes the case for a hard evidence based policy backbone to safeguard the sustainable eco friendly supply of safe smoked and dried fishery products to support food security particularly in the developing world. It aims to enlighten policy makers, fisheries planners and decision makers and any development practitioner interested in developing small scale fisheries or promoting sustainable food systems as well as private sector entrepreneurs who wish to implement this technology to improve their products. It provides recommendations on how best to mainstream consumers interests while supporting sustainable livelihoods interventions in fisheries communities. Page 4 of cover
