

AP Government Chapter 3 Notes: Federalism

There are three ways of ordering relations between central governments and local units:

1. Unitary systems allow ultimate governmental authority to rest in the hands of the national or central government. In France, the decisions of the governments of the departments and municipalities can be overruled by the national government.
2. A confederation is the opposite of a unitary system. It is a league of independent states in which a central government or administration handles only those matters of common concern expressly delegated to it by the member states. The central government unit has no ability to make laws directly applicable to individuals unless the member states explicitly support such laws.
3. The federal system lies between the unitary and Confederal forms of government. In a federal system, authority is divided between a central government and regional, or sub-divisional governments. Within each government's sphere of authority, each is supreme, in theory.

Why Federalism?

1. The supporters of the new constitution were political pragmatists – they realized that without a federal arrangement, there would be no ratification of the new Constitution. The appeal of federalism was that it retained state traditions and local power while establishing a strong national government capable of handling common problems.
2. Federalism allows many functions to be “farmed out” by the central government to the states or provinces. The lower levels of government, accepting these responsibilities, thereby can become the focus of political dissatisfaction rather than the national authorities.
3. The sheer geographic or population size of some nations makes it impractical to locate all political authority in one place.
4. Federalism brings the government closer to the people. It allows more direct access to, and influence on, government agencies and policies, rather than leaving the population restive and dissatisfied with a remote, faceless, all-powerful central authority.
