Renewable Energy Guided Reading

Renewable vs. Nonrenewable Resources

Natural resources are things, materials, substances and components found in the natural environment. They exist "naturally" or innately in the world and are not the result of human manipulation or creation. There are two types of natural resources: renewable resources and nonrenewable resources.

Renewable resources can regenerate if they are alive or be replenished by biochemical cycles if they are nonliving. Theoretically, there is an "infinite" amount of these resources. Water, sunlight, plants, animals and wind are examples of renewable resources.

Nonrenewable resources cannot be regenerated or replenished by natural processes. There is a finite amount of nonrenewable resources, so once used up, they are forever gone. Fossil fuels such as coal, oil and natural gas, minerals, metals and fissile material are examples of nonrenewable energy.

Fossil fuels are resources created from the remains of once living organisms that lived hundreds of millions of years ago. Technically, fossil fuels are continually being made but the process is extremely slow and we use fossil fuels much faster than they are created. For this reason, we classify fossil fuels as a nonrenewable resource.

Renewable resources can become nonrenewable resources if they are used faster than they can be replenished. If the resource no longer exists, there is nothing to regenerate or be replenished. For example, if we cut down trees faster than we grow them, trees can become a nonrenewable resource because there are no trees to regenerate.
