How Night Came to Be: Part 4

While Bat was gone, Owl and Fox opened the basket. They wondered what was inside. Fox smiled at Owl and Owl tried to peek a peek. "Should we open it?" Fox asked.

"It is not ours," Owl answered.

But there were no clothes, and they could not wear the report. They had to open the basket. Together, they lifted the top. Darkness flew out! Owl and Fox watched as it spread all over the sky. Out there, Bat was on his way back. He groped again using the open basket.

"What have you done?" he cried, snapping his fingers. Owl and Fox ran away. But darkness crept and crept until darkness. He flew and flew trying to gather it up. It will take all night to put it back in the basket for the night. And there is no such thing as night. It will never be back in!

From that time on, Bat had a new job to do. He crept during the day and he would work at night. All night, he gathered the darkness and put it back in the basket. By morning, it was light again. But the darkness crept back again. Each time Bat gathered the last bit into the basket, the other darkness crept back again. Each time Bat gathered the last bit into the basket, the other darkness crept back again. Darkness slowly crept through the cracks. By nightime, it was dark again.
