

Shifting from one speed to another smoothly and silently

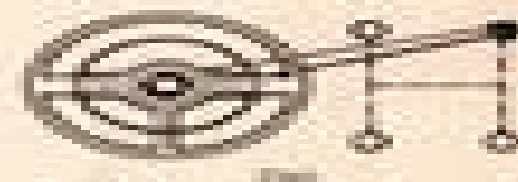

LOW GEAR

Gives the maximum pulling ability. Except on ice, a car should normally be started in low gear. Always bring your car to a full stop before shifting into low gear. A short period of acceleration to a car speed of 5 to 10 miles per hour in low gear is sufficient before shifting into second gear. Although your Plymouth will run silently at high speeds in low gear, such operation will result in loss of economy.

SECOND GEAR

Is ideal for steep grades and slow-moving traffic. Even in conditions of economical fuel exchange, the shift into high gear should be made at 15 to 20 miles per hour. Regardless of Plymouth's silent operation in second gear, high speeds in this gear should be avoided if you are interested in long car life and economical performance.

IN HIGH GEAR

You have at your command backing acceleration and performance. You can also drive very slowly in high gear without the need for constant shifting into lower gears. If the engine appears to "lurch," or when ascending a steep incline, this is a signal that a lower gear should be used. On extremely slippery surfaces, start in "second" or "high" to reduce wheel spin.

REVERSE GEAR

The car should always be fully stopped before shifting into reverse. Always move slowly and carefully when backing—the rear "roll in place" behind you.
