1915

The Hart-Parr Co. put their "Little Devil" (page 466) on the market. The LaCrosse Co. began building the "Happy Farmer" (page 45) in Minneapolis, Minn., and then moved to LaCrosse, Wis., where the Company was liquidated in 1924. Allis-Chalmers started producing their 8-16; the Case Threshing Machine Co. a 10-20 kerosene tractor (page 459); and the International Harvester Co. their 4-cylinder (double twin) 15-30 Titan (page 45). In 1915 the name of this tractor was changed to International.

The Michigan Tractor Co. of Detroit, produced a three-wheel drive tractor (page 46) with "all the weight on the drivers", but few seem to have been manufactured. Apparently this company was reorganized in 1916 under the name of the A. T. Harrow Co. The Dakota (page 46) with angle iron drive wheel rims, the Detroit Line Drive Tractor (page 47) which could be hitched to pull any wheeled vehicle, and the Rumely "Ideal Pull" (page 46) were placed on the market. The assets of the Detroit Line Drive Tractor Co. were bought by the Line Drive Tractor Co. and then known by the latter name.

The Minneapolis Steel and Machine Co. introduced their TC 10-20 tricycle with one drive wheel; the Ford Tractor Co. of Minneapolis, Minn., produced the Model B Ford Tractor and the Ebert-Duryea Farm Tractor Co., Chicago, Ill., their gearless roller-rim-drive (page 45). This tractor was the invention of Chas. E. Duryea, pioneer automobile inventor, who designed the car which bore his name in the early days of the automobile industry. Henry C. Ebert, Vice President of this tractor Company, was a former Vice President of the Westinghouse Co. and spent several years with the tractor "reducing its construction to a practical basis." The Anderson three wheel tractor (page 46) appeared; and the Rock Island Plow Co. produced another model of their "Holder" friction drive (page 46).

Probably no single factor was more responsible for farmer acceptance of the tractor than the tractor demonstrations or shows and this year the interest seemed to be at fever heat. According to Arch Merrillfield of the Farm Equipment Retailing, "Farmer interest in tractors was intensified in 1915 by three factors — (1) the increased demand for food production occasioned by World War I; (2) the advent of smaller and more versatile tractors and (3) the series of tractor demonstrations held in various mid-western states.

"To the average farmer the score sheets of the Winnipeg contests held from 1908 to 1912 were difficult to translate into terms of work on their own farms. In 1911 one of the prominent farm papers (The 20th Century Farmer) sponsored a field demonstration which was held annually near Omaha and Fremont, Nebraska. By 1915 this show was so well-attended that similar demonstrations were promoted by farm and trade magazines, commercial clubs and other organizations, in South Dakota, Illinois, Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas, Indiana, Oklahoma, and Texas. Thirty tractor manufacturers had entries at the Eldd, Oklahoma demonstration in 1915.

"On March 29, 1916, a committee of the National Tractor & Thresher Manufacturers Assn. met in Chicago to formulate rules and to make arrangements for holding a series or circuit of demonstrations in strategic agricultural centers. Starting in Dallas, Texas, on July
