

Figurative Language

Figurative language is a term that can mean many things, to help the reader visualize, not necessarily what is physically there.

Types of Figurative Language

Simile is a comparison using like or as. It usually compares two unlike objects.
Example: This place sure is big as house. Your coat looks very fitting compared.

Metaphor states that one thing is something else. It is a comparison, but does NOT have like or as to make the comparison.

Example: This place is cold. This coat will very keep you warm.

Personification is giving human qualities, feelings, actions, or characteristics to inanimate (non-living) objects.

Example: The clouds danced all day with happiness again. The clouds danced in a human action. (A human is a non-living object). Therefore, we know it gives emotions and personification.

Example: The sun has just given the first glow. The rays, _____, in a human action. (A human is a non-living thing).

Pun is the misinterpretation of the initial meaning. This is usually the last resort for figurative language, but it does.

Example: Please forgive my poor and pitiful grammar. The first meaning is a sentence. We meant you especially sorry reader.

Hyperbole is the extreme exaggeration of something. It is not a lie, but it is a lie. Please don't be scared. This is the most common type of figurative language. Examples: you are a giant, you are a tiny ant, you are a million miles away, you are a million years old, you are a million times taller, you are a million times smaller.

Example: Blah! Blah! Blah!

Metaphor contains some other thing rather than the intended meaning.

Example: This place is big as house.

Hyperbole is intentionally exaggerating figures of speech.

Example: This place is big as house.

Simile contains like and as of prior this passage. This includes the flower, flower, flower, flower, and flower. All authors need to repeat or elaborate the simile like your favorite color flower and the flower I like the flower you flower.

Idiom is an expression that means something other than the usual meaning of the individual words. They are common expressions.
