

America in the 1920s DBQ

Historical Context

The Great War was over and America's sons returned home having witnessed the horrors of war. The survivors brought tales of great battles, death, cabarets, new foods, dance and the wonderment of Paris with its grand boulevards. Upon their arrival, the soldiers were astonished to see that America too had been changed by the war. Women's fashion, appearance and attitudes had changed as they rallied and protested for the right to vote. African Americans had moved to northern cities in great numbers, automobile filled the streets, nativists and the KKK looked with hatred towards immigrants, the government cracked down on radicals during a "Red Scare," new inventions, and mass culture captured people's imaginations. The 1920's have been called by many names "The Roaring Twenties," "The Jazz Age," and the "Age of Paranoia." Whatever name you choose for the 1920's it remains the decade when America came of age as an urban modern society.

Document 1

"If it had not been for these things, I might have lived out my life talking at street corners to scorning men. I might have died unmarked, unknown, a failure. Now we are not a failure. This is our career and triumph. Never in our full life could we hope to do such work for tolerance, for justice, for man's understanding of man as now we do by accident. Our words-our lives-our pains-nothing! The taking of our lives-lives of a good shoemaker and a poor fish-peddler—all! That last moment belongs to us—that agony is our triumph."

—Bartolomeo Vanzetti, 1927, shortly before being executed
