- (1) Repetition of the findings are described in the literature.
- (2) The researchers placed up their own views on the existing work. By acknowledging the work done and reviewing the work done, the researchers can
- (3) identify the strengths and weaknesses of the work done by others. This helps them to identify the gaps in the existing knowledge and to develop their own research objectives.
- (4) It helps the researchers to identify the gaps in the existing knowledge and to develop their own research objectives.
- (5) It helps the researchers to identify the gaps in the existing knowledge and to develop their own research objectives.
- (6) It helps the researchers to identify the gaps in the existing knowledge and to develop their own research objectives.
- (7) It helps the researchers to identify the gaps in the existing knowledge and to develop their own research objectives.
- (8) It helps the researchers to identify the gaps in the existing knowledge and to develop their own research objectives.
- (9) It helps the researchers to identify the gaps in the existing knowledge and to develop their own research objectives.
- (10) It helps the researchers to identify the gaps in the existing knowledge and to develop their own research objectives.
