However, the Soviet union established a scolded unionism regime that did not adhere to the ideologies in which communism was originally created, which was to serve the masses. This form of communism failed in countries such as Poland, Czechoslovakia, and Hungary. The original intent of communism was meant to have a classless society. However, the Soviet communist parties did not actually achieve that. As Molotov Dismissal wrote in The New Class, "The exclusive, if unwritten, law that only party members can become policeman, officers, diplomats, and only they can exercise actual authority, creates a special privileged group of bureaucrats. The unofficial class of bureaucrats defied the true meaning of communism. Communist rulers created an illusion that was named communism, but in its basis, was not communism whatsoever. Soviet communists used their privileges to create a class that pushed the everyday citizen further down and limited the progress an individual can make. The everyday citizen was forced to live a life where they wake up, work, go home, eat, and sleep. The citizens were stripped down to their basic necessities that were sometimes even rejected."

Croatian columnist, Slovenia Dramatic, wrote how, "Every mother in Bulgaria can point to where communism failed, from the failure of the planned economy. To the lack of apartments, child care facilities, clothes, disposable diapers, or toilet paper." The communist did not provide all the necessities for people to live comfortably. Still, kept suppressing the lower class, while the bureaucrats lived comfortably. Communism was never meant to have a society in which an individual is held back from their necessities. Yet, the Soviet communists repressed many necessities and civil rights which included freedom of speech and public expression.

Václav Havel, president of Czechoslovakia, spoke in his New Year's Day Address of 1990 how, "Our country is not flourishing. The great creative and spiritual potential of our nation is not being applied meaningfully." Havel perfectly understood that communism withheld a lot of their creativity by not allowing people to freely express themselves. He even mentioned how, "The state, which calls itself a state of workers, is humiliating and exploiting them instead." Communist workers worked extremely hard for a low wage "producing things for which there is no demand while we are in short of things we need."

Soviet communists took advantage of the power they had over the citizens and used that power to enlarge the gap between leaders of the communist party and the people being ruled. According to a Croatian columnist, Slovenia Dramatic, "the banality of everyday life is where it [communism] really failed, rather than on the level of ideology." The communist party did not provide enough services for the people which caused the people to be opposed to communism. With
