The earliest national newspaper states it was clear that letters would need to continue to travel to support a growing nation's needs and desires. The first and often was considered a true triumph in western history. The first of the time, and was often the only way to hear news from home.

The Pony Express was the first company to deliver mail to the western side of the United States. It started in St. Joseph, Missouri, and was able to send letters and important messages across the country faster than ever before.

The Pony Express route was a long, about 1,900 miles journey from St. Joseph to San Francisco. Riders rode horses about 75-100 miles before passing the mail to the next rider. They did it every 60-70 miles, even through harsh weather, and was considered a record time of about 10 days. In 1861, the Pony Express was replaced by the telegraph. It was a great achievement, but it was short-lived.

One of the famous riders of the Pony Express was "Buffalo Bill" Cody. He became a star for the Pony Express at just 18 years old. He was known for his skill when riding at a gallop, and he was the fastest to get mail across the country. He was with the Pony Express more on a part of the year than in the fall. Buffalo Bill became a great hero for his brave deeds, and he was rewarded with many medals and honors.

The Pony Express was used for about 18 months before being replaced by the telegraph. Even though it was short-lived, the Pony Express became famous in American history for its speed, dedication, and courage. It showed the power of human strength to help deliver news to communities across the country and the United States.
